Violent outburst

41 people shot, 7 fatally, in one of the year's bloodiest weekends

Chicago Tribune

As she headed out the door Sunday morning, Adrianne Wilberton put on a brave face. It was time to tell her son the news, and she didn't want him hearing it from anyone else.

But her composure unraveled as she walked toward the car, a barrage of neighbors hugging her on the way out of her apartment. By the time she reached the front lawn, the mother of six was in tears.

"Our son is dead! Oh, Jesus!" the 57-year-old screamed, referring to Cortez, one of her three sons, who was killed earlier that morning in Austin. "Oh my God! Oh my God! We were just talking."

At least 28 people were shot—six of them fatally—Saturday afternoon into Father's Day Sunday, stretching from 94th Street and Loomis Avenue on the South Side up to about North Avenue and North Pulaski Road on the Northwest Side, according to authorities.

Shootings from Friday afternoon into Saturday left another 13 people shot, one fatally. The combined tally resulted in 41 people shot, and seven killed this weekend. Last year at about the same time, there were 53 people shot, nine fatally in one weekend.

The rash of violent crime came as Chicago has seen a large dip in overall homicide and shooting numbers this year.

When asked whether this weekend's shooting numbers cast doubt on the department's crime-fighting strategies, Chicago police spokesman Adam Collins insisted they are working, noting the city in 2013 has posted its lowest homicide totals in years.

Across the city, reminders of the bloody weekend literally stained some of Chicago's streets. In Little Village, 15 lit memorial candles stood in blood where Ricardo Herrera, 21, was fatally wounded and two others shot on the 2500 block of South Ridgeway Avenue.

About five miles away, a long trail of blood remained splattered in a Northwest Side alley where 16-year-old Kevin Rivera tried to run from a gunman on a bicycle, authorities said.

Rivera's family was planning to move in two weeks from Hermosa, and a social worker was enrolling the teenager in the city's summer jobs program. But late Saturday, someone shot Rivera in the 4100 block of West North Avenue, police said. The boy, who lived a few

A DEADLY WEEKEND

Other victims of gun violence over the weekend included:

- » McGregor Porter, 24; shot to death Friday night in South Austin after an altercation
- » Todd Wood, 40; killed when a man opened fire late Saturday in a Grand Crossing club
- » Jamal Jones, 19; shot to death while riding his bike home early Sunday in Englewood
- » Antwon Johnson, 24; shot to death by police early Sunday in Lawndale after officers said he pointed a gun at them blocks from the scene, was pronounced dead about 1:35 a.m. Sunday at Advocate Illinois Masonic Medical Center, authorities said.

Grief-stricken and exhausted, Kevin Rivera's family declined to talk about Rivera or his death. "I can't believe it," said Rivera's mother, Maria Figueroa.

In a brief Tribune interview last year, Rivera said he had tried to register at Orr Academy High School but left after a couple of days because he didn't feel safe there. "There is a lot of tension," he said at the time.

Wingman wisdom: Chicago reality check

Ernest Wilkins

» @ernestwilkins

1. You can become very successful just by keeping the status quo. There was a saying back in the first Daley era about the Democratic machine: "Don't make no waves, don't back no losers." That mentality still is prevalent. Sometimes, deviating from the "rah-rah no ketchup '85 Bears Dick's sausage" narrative is frowned upon to the point that any attempt to point out flaws is shouted down in a hail of angry backlash.

2. The people with money have no taste and the people with taste have no money. Chicago culture seems to be at the whim of powder-blue-shirt-with-a-white-T-shirt-poking-out corporate types. The rest of us should use the system to their advantage. Tons of corporations have funds set aside for arts endowments or enriching small businesses. Go get some money and then do what you do better than everyone else. Look at what the local food and booze communities have done by building a fiercely loyal support system. If Chicago takes time to support Chicago, everyone wins.

3. The biggest celebrities here are athletes. We make cases for natives such as Jennifer Hudson and Vince Vaughn, but you're out of your mind if you don't think the most famous people in this city aren't jocks. They run this town, thanks to die-hard fan bases bordering on insanity.

4. A lot of Chicagoans don't care about the South Side. Be it ignorance or preconceived notions about crime, people moving here are told, "Oh, don't even bother to look there." That detachment means businesses don't want to open there, so food deserts flourish and half of the city gets second-class treatment.

5. The CTA isn't so bad. There are a LOT of things that suck about it, but there also are qualities that people from other cities would kill for. Don't believe me? Take a train in Atlanta.

6. The "Wicker Park is for hipsters" thing hasn't been accurate for five years. Do we even know what a hipster is anymore? At this point, it's someone who had a PBR once at a party, right? Wicker Park is flourishing with moneyed families and strollers as far as the eye can see.

7. For whatever reason, Chicagoans still have an inferiority complex when it comes to New York. What is this incessant need to prove ourselves? Any opportunity to take a potshot at NYC is jumped on. At this point, it's just tired.

8. Chicago's rock scene is dormant. Chicago has cranked out quality bands by the boatload for decades, but recently, there has been a dearth of local rock music reaching a large audience. All I can say is, it's crazy to see our rap community putting out more consistent material than our rock scene. Speaking of ...

9. This is the best possible time to be a Chicago rapper. Eyes have been on this city scouting rap talent for a year now. The focus might not last forever, but I'm happy it's here.

10. The only time Chicago residents eat deep-dish pizza is when out-of-town guests show up. I mean, it's true.

ERNEST WILKINS IS CHICAGO'S WINGMAN.

Bus servicer Kamilah Kitchen mops the floors of a CTA bus Thursday. ANTHONY SCUFFLE/TRIBUNE

Workin' the bus wash

CTA raises its standards of vehicle cleanliness

Chicago Tribune

It's after 10 p.m., and more than 250 buses are parked at the CTA's Kedzie Avenue garage, awaiting some TLC following a long day at the hands of simply too many slovenly riders who were inconsiderate of the passengers who would board after them.

The first order of business before buses are refueled and run through the wash rack each night is to sweep out mounds of debris: an amalgam that includes food scraps, plastic bottles, newspapers, and the occasional hypodermic syringe, splotch of blood or human waste.

Surfaces including windows, grab railings and seats get a nightly wipe-down, and graffiti is removed, while floors are washed on an as-needed basis, officials said.

The dirty little job of restoring the transit agency's 1,868 buses to respectable condition before the morning rush falls on crews called bus servicers, who are assigned to seven CTA bus garages across the city.

"Oh, man, the buses go out good, and they come back terrible, just terrible, terrible," said Kamilah Kitchen, 32, who has worked as a bus servicer for eight months after learning about the opening at a CTA job fair.

The bus servicing job recently became more challenging because the CTA set the bar higher. Under the new criteria, buses are cleaned

BY THE NUMBERS

23 Every 23 days, buses are sent through a four-hour deep cleaning. The target for deep-cleaning CTA rail cars is every 19 days, CTA spokeswoman Tammy Chase said.

$12.88 to $29.46

Hourly wages for full-time bus servicers, which are based on experience

11 The number of points on a score card supervisors fill out after each bus is cleaned. Categories include graffiti and gum.

$20 million

This year's total budget for bus servicing more thoroughly and more often.

The CTA keeps a monthly score card on bus cleanliness. Initially, scores plummeted to a 41 percent average performance—a failing grade—after the more stringent criteria were implemented last summer, CTA records show. Since then, scores have more than doubled.

Each bus servicer must clean about 26 buses per night for daily maintenance.

Asked what discarded items have surprised her the most, Kitchen was quick to respond.

"Underclothes, bras, panties. Needles. Bloody pants. Feces. Throw-up. Everything. Just awful," the Chicagoan said. "I've seen some things in eight months."

2013 Puerto Rican Day Parade
CAROLYN VAN HOUTEN/TRIBUNE

Puerto Rico parade marches new route

Chicago Tribune

For the first time since it was launched 48 years ago, the Puerto Rican Day Parade was held Saturday away from Chicago's downtown, though the stream of dignitaries, beauty queens and motorcycle riders passing along the new route on the Northwest Side was just as vibrant as in years past.

Thousands stood shoulder-to-shoulder on Division Street between Western and California avenues watching the parade's floats pass by.

Many said they were not bothered by a decision by the Puerto Rican Parade Committee of Chicago to move the parade away from Grant Park, though that announcement in April sparked some controversy between Puerto Rican community leaders.

"We don't care," said Juan Rivera, 62, as he sat in a golf cart decorated with Puerto Rican flags. "They could send us to the moon, we gonna be there. No matter where we are, we gonna be proud."

The change in venues sparked criticism from some community leaders, who argued the move away from downtown decreases the visibility of the Puerto Rican community in the city.

Erika Gomez, 26, who for five years has taken her nieces and nephews to Grant Park to watch the parade, initially was skeptical about a Division Street celebration.

She had worried that fewer people might attend the parade and that there could be more violence, Gomez said. But by the end of the festivities, she felt reassured.

"Overall, it turned out good, a great turnout," Gomez said.

Blessed are the bikers

VATICAN CITY Biker culture came to the Vatican on Sunday as Pope Francis blessed thousands of Harley-Davidsons and their riders, who celebrated the manufacturer's 110th anniversary with a loud parade and plenty of leather.

Thundering Harley engines nearly drowned out the Latin recitation of the "Our Father" prayer that accompanied Francis as he greeted the crowd before Mass. Standing in his open-top jeep, Francis drove up the main boulevard leading to St. Peter's Square, blessing the thousands of people in what was a giant Harley parking lot.

Once the service got underway, bikers in their trademark leather Harley vests sat in the square alongside nuns and tens of thousands of faithful Catholics taking part in an unrelated, two-day pro-life rally.

Francis addressed them both afterward, giving a blessing to the "numerous participants" of the Harley gathering.

Tens of thousands of Harley owners from around the world descended on Rome for the four-day anniversary of the American manufacturer. The main events were Sunday's Vatican blessing and a parade Saturday past the Colosseum and other historic landmarks—adding color, traffic and noise to an already colorful day in downtown Rome, thanks to a gay pride march.

Earlier in the week, Milwaukee-based Harley gave Francis two white classic Harleys for the Vatican police force to use.

There was something a bit incongruous about the Harley crowd—known for its "Freedom" motto, outlaw image and adventuresome spirit—taking part in a solemn papal Mass to commemorate a 1995 encyclical on the inviolability of human life.

4 injured in Indianapolis fire

Four firefighters were injured Saturday and more than 100 homes near downtown Indianapolis had to be evacuated after a recycling facility caught fire and collapsed. None of the injuries were serious, and by Sunday residents were allowed to return home. The blaze took eight hours to control Saturday as more than two dozen 30-gallon propane tanks continually exploded and the fire sent up an acrid cloud that could be seen for miles over the city.

Rowhani wins Iranian election

The election of Hassan Rowhani as Iran's new president has raised hopes of increased engagement with other nations and a new era of moderation in the Islamic Republic, according to commentaries across the region Sunday. Rowhani, a soft-spoken, 64-year-old cleric, will hold his first press conference Monday, the Iranian Student News Agency reported.

Putin: Don't arm Syrian rebels

Russian President Vladimir Putin, arriving in Britain ahead of an international summit set to be dominated by disagreement over the U.S. decision to send weapons to Syria's rebels, said the West must not arm fighters whom he accused of eating human flesh. After months of deliberations, Washington last week decided to send weapons to the rebels, declaring that Syrian president Bashar Assad's forces had crossed a "red line" by using nerve gas.

STANLEY CUP FINALS • GAME 3

ONE Wild RIDE

By Scott Bolohan | FOR REDEYE

The last time the Blackhawks were in the Stanley Cup Final, in 2010, I went to Philadelphia, wore my Duncan Keith jersey and had my physical well-being threatened multiple times.

So I decided to try it again, this time in Boston, for Saturday's Game 2. After all, Boston couldn't be worse than Philly, right? They seem like reasonable, level-headed people other than that time they started a war because they didn't want to pay too much for tea.

Yeah, it was going to be bad. SCOTT BOLOHAN IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

■ I spent the day taking in the sights in my Keith jersey. I started in Boston Common, and within 20 seconds of putting the jersey on, I was told the Blackhawks suck. Then a nice old lady came up to warn me about what I was doing: "You would get slaughtered if you did this on Monday." ■ In the Public Garden they put a Bruins jersey on a statue of George Washington (clearly a Capitals fan, by the way) and did the same for a series of duckling sculptures (easily crushable by a brachiosaurus). ■ As I was making my way out of the Common I heard a vendor say, "I should beat this guy up," and he came over, looked at me and said, "Oh, hey, you look like Tom Brady." And walked away.

■ Continuing along the Freedom Trail, the physical embodiment of my Boston nightmares, a tattooed, ripped, shirtless, bald guy (probably named Fitzy), walked past me and yelled, "baaaahhhm." Which I think means "bum" in real English. ■ No one said anything as I went through Faneuil Hall and Quincy Market, other than a guy who saw my Duncan Keith jersey and said he went to college with him.

LISTEN, MY CHILDREN, AND YOU SHALL HEAR... OF A HAWKS FAN'S GUTSY TRIP TO BOSTON

■ After wandering around Cambridge, where I heard more about genomes than goalies, I walked around Fenway. One of the hot dog vendors talked to me about the series. I said everyone had been pretty good to me so far. He said that was because "they hadn't started drinking yet."

■ I was going to go watch the game at the Cheers bar because I thought it would complete my troll job on the city of Boston, but when I walked in I realized everyone knows your name there because everyone looks like they just came from a business convention and forgot to take their nametags off.

» I went to Bunker Hill, where a re-enactment of a 1775 militia was taking place. I ended up talking to one of the re-enactors. Shockingly, he wasn't a hockey fan. He said as long as I stayed away from South Boston, I'd be fine.

Game 6*: at Bruins, 7 p.m. June 24, NBC

Game 7*: at Blackhawks, 7 p.m. June 26, NBC

*If necessary

» In front of Old North Church there was a statue of Paul Revere with a Bruins jersey on. When I was taking pictures of it, I saw a boy named Jacob, 6, wearing one of the only three Blackhawks jersey I'd see all day. They were from Old Town visiting family in Boston, and his mom said he refused to take the jersey off for the past four days. His little sister, for the record, was wearing a Cubs hat she made sure I saw.

» In front of the TD Garden I saw Niki Irzyk, 24, and Steve Stefan, 23, both of Arlington Heights, taking pictures in Hawks jerseys. As soon as they got their pictures, they smartly took off their Hawks jerseys. They booked this trip a while ago and realized there was a decent chance the Hawks could be playing the Bruins. They planned to watch the game at a bar and "possibly" wear their jerseys.

"We've gotten some mean remarks, but it's not bad," Stefan said. "They've made it well-known they don't like our kind here."

While we were chatting, a couple of tour buses drove past and pointed us out. We got booted.

» So based on a Twitter suggestion from Ana Espinosa, whose boyfriend is a Bruins fan, I went to McGreevy's in Black Bay, which I later found out is owned by the Dropkick Murphys' lead singer. When I asked her if I would die there, she said "possibly."

It ended up being the perfect combination of a great sports atmosphere with only a mild chance of someone going Mark Wahlberg on my eyes. I was the only Hawks jersey in the place and nothing stands out like a red jersey in a sea of black.

» At the beginning of the game I was hanging by the door for a quick escape when someone came up behind me and hugged me; I seriously thought I was getting shanked. Turned out it was Milana Grozdaich, 23, a Hawks fan from Munster, Ind., who works in Boston now. She wasn't wearing a jersey after wearing one for Game 1 and taking a lot of abuse.

"I have to defend the Hawks, but Boston respects the team," Grozdaich said. "The first game we went to a bar we walked in and the guy at the door said, 'What are you doing here?' People turn and look. I don't see many Hawks fans here."

» After the Hawks scored their first goal, the place was silent. The Bruins hadn't scored in more than a game's worth of time. I definitely didn't want a blowout. And the way the Hawks played the first period, it looked like it might go that way.

» When the Bruins finally scored, you could feel a giant sigh of relief in the bar. They threw confetti and blew horns. From that point on, the bar was full of confidence. While I kept anticipating the worst, they expected a Bruins goal (which might have been because they had around 200 scoring chances).

» As the game and alcohol level of the Bruins fans progressed, the bar got more boisterous. I spent a lot of time looking over my shoulder. I felt hunted. And the whole time I was praying for no overtime.

» So sure enough it goes to OT. The thing that scared me the most was how much the Bruins fans were enjoying the game while I was hardly breathing. I have few recollections of overtime. I still have no idea how the game ended. I just remember a bunch of people screaming, things being thrown in the air, then people screaming at me, grabbing at me and I dashing out of the bar and into a cab like I was in the Beatles, except if everyone hated them.

STRESSED

With the Stanley Cup Final tied at one game apiece, our panelists are having issues. Especially Sarah. Gross.

1	How are you feeling heading into Game 3 of the Stanley Cup Final?	I have an appointment this morning with my cardiologist. This will be a long, long series with LOTS of stress.	Like I did on my first-ever date with a girl: nervous, sweaty and just a bit queasy.	Two words: adult diaper.	Saturday's loss really stuck in my Crawford, but today I feel Sharp.	Stressed. Like, farting anxiously stressed.
2	With the Stanley Cup Final shifting to Boston ...	See above answer, but add nitroglycerin to the mix.	... we can finally figure out which city has the funniest accent.	... get ready for every a-hole you know to do the "pahk the cah in Hahwahd yahd" bit.	... I'll be shifting to a new cable service if the broadcast goes dark again.	... I worry that there's going to be a lot of tired, hung-over Chicagoans this week ...
3	Patrick Kane says he used the Miami Heat as inspiration. What does he mean?	Think of hot women in South Beach to get out of a slump.	That he's gonna start playing when he feels like it, like LeBron does?	He borrowed Dwyane Wade's capri pants for game-day arrivals.	Ahhhhh, that explains it. No wonder Kaner has flopped in many playoff games this year.	He means that we're two months away from "The Decision 2: Decision Harder."
4	What does Jonathan Toews get for winning the Selke Trophy?	A trip to Toronto and a bowl of soup.	It's not the Stanley Cup, so I guess he got a paperweight.	Calls of congrats from other great two-way players like David Bowie and Ari Difranco.	Ummmm, I believe that would be the Selke Trophy. No?	An annotated letter describing who exactly Selke is?
5	What will Ian Stewart do while serving his 10-game tweeting suspension?	Ten games without pay. Get used to it, because that's what it feels like when you're out of baseball, pal!	I hear he's got a new Theo Epstein parody account running: @CrankyCubsBoss.	Work on his swing, hopefully.	Whatever it is, he'll continue to suck doing it.	Relearn how to hit/field/tweet, maybe?

Why do the Hawks always get tripped up on Game 3?

By Leonor Vivanco

REDEYE

With the Stanley Cup Final tied at one win apiece, the Blackhawks will try to regain control of the series—and snap two streaks—when they hit the ice for Game 3 on Monday in Boston.

One streak is the Bruins' six straight wins at home. The other is the recent bane of the Hawks' existence in the playoffs.

The Hawks have lost every Game 3 in the playoffs since they won the Cup in 2010. Because they have had home-ice advantage in the 2013 Stanley Cup run, the third game in each series has been on the road. Game 3 resulted in losses to Minnesota, Detroit and L.A.

"I don't really know what our history has been in Game 3s during these playoffs and in previous years," captain Jonathan Toews said. "So it doesn't matter what game we're in or what the score is in the series, we try and play like it's Game 7 no matter what, so that doesn't change."

Of course, the Hawks wanted to head to Boston with two wins under their belt. The overtime loss Saturday in Game 2 was "frustrating," players said after the game, especially after they dominated in the first period.

"We just got away from the way we play the game, the way we were playing early on in the game," Toews said. "So it had nothing to do with them turning it on. I think we just started letting them do whatever they wanted to and we gave them chance after chance, which you saw in the overtime period with turning pucks over."

Heading into Monday, the team knows it must hang on to the momentum it builds for the entire game.

"We've got to keep playing our game and not get down," said goalie Corey Crawford, who made 26 saves Saturday.

The Hawks and their fans would have liked a win—and a little extra breathing room—but instead ended up with a tie series.

"It's a challenge; you got to win four games and it's a race to get there," said Patrick Sharp, who scored the only goal for the Hawks on Saturday. "Both teams aren't going to give up, that's for sure. There's no point in hanging our heads. We'll regroup and get ready to go for the next game."

The Hawks will be without their loud, loyal and supportive fans when they play at Boston's TD Garden.

"We know what we're getting ourselves into heading over to Boston and how well they play in their building. But that's not going to change our mindset at all," said Sharp, who leads the NHL this postseason with 10 goals, along with the Bruins' David Krejci. "We're going to find a way to play our best game. We're going to have to."

Even if the game goes into overtime again. Unless the Hawks want to break yet another streak

BAD THINGS IN 3S

The Blackhawks have lost every Game 3 in the playoffs since winning the Stanley Cup in 2010.

2011: lost 3-2 vs. Vancouver in Western quarterfinals

2012: lost 3-2 (OT) vs. Phoenix in Western quarterfinals

2013: lost 3-2 (OT) at Minnesota in Western quarterfinals

2013: lost 3-1 at Detroit in Western semifinals

2013: lost 3-1 at Los Angeles in Western finals

Meet the five types of Kanye fans at redeyechicago.com.

THE MANY OPINIONS OF KANYE WEST

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

There was a time when you couldn't walk past a newsstand without tripping over a new Kanye West interview. Times have changed. Newsstands basically have ceased to exist, and Yeezy's a little more judicious about who gets to publish his thoughts. (Also, Twitter exists.) After reading his mind-blowingly wacky interview with The New York Times, we compiled this chart of his thoughts at various points in his illustrious career.

DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEDANA

ON TAYLOR SWIFT

SEPTEMBER 2010
via Twitter

I'm sorry, Taylor. We're both artists, and the media and managers are trying to get between us. She deserves the apology more than anyone. Thank you [Twitter co-founders] Biz Stone and Evan Williams for creating a platform where we can communicate directly.

NOVEMBER 2010
to Hot 97

She just talked about how, you know, people would come up to her in the grocery store and really just bring it up, and she would defend me at the grocery store—I'm sorry, defend me in an interview, she said at her grocery store, she was actually defending me. It's an amazing, compelling situation. The situation is bigger to me than the Bush moment.

to The New York Times

But has that instinct led you astray? Like the Taylor Swift interruption at the MTV Video Music Awards, things like that. It's only led me to complete awesomeness at all times. It's only led me to awesome truth and awesomeness. Beauty, truth, awesomeness. That's all it is. So no regrets? I don't have one regret.

BECOMING YEEZUS

KANYE WEST ADDS TO HIS LEGACY OF ATTITUDE WITH LATEST ALBUM

By Adam Lukach

FOR REDEYE

There's no denying that Kanye West has become synonymous with arrogance.

Compared with his current, astronomical self-image, though, the Chicago-raised rap/fashion icon's musical beginnings were humble. People actually liked him because of that underdog status. Once upon a time (2004), "College Dropout" came out of nowhere. Progressively, Yeezy's bellowing ego has scorched the world, and with his sixth solo album, "Yeezus," which is set to drop Tuesday but leaked online Friday, West again has been hoarding Earth's oxygen with over-the-top interviews containing almost exclusively boastful soundbites. How did the 36-year-old rapper get to this place?

Nine years ago, "Dropout" was endearing on a cosmetic level, with its pre-pubescent soul samples and light-hearted jokes from a non-controversial, conscious MC. West had a sensitive heart that he wore on pink polo sleeves. In fact, he was such a fun, harmless backpack performer that he actually rapped about wearing a backpack ("Breathe In, Breathe Out").

Ye already was doing what he considered Very Important Things as early as "Dropout." (Read the lyrics to "Jesus Walks" sometime.) When Spin's Jon Caramanica asked him in 2005 why he told "60 Minutes" he wasn't a prophet, he said, "I was probably trying to conform to America. The answer, actually, is yes. Undoubtedly."

So maybe the humility didn't last that long. See, West never really talked lightly about anything, especially his art and passions. When "Dropout" moved 3 million copies, he was ready to spread the Gospel of Yeezy (not yet Yeezus) and started "talking on TV like it's just you and me," as he would later rap. Leading up to his sophomore effort, "Late Registration," he stormed the national stage to slam Britney Spears, the MTV Video Music Awards and the Grammys. He then beefed with then-President George W. Bush during a Hurricane Katrina relief telecast about the president's treatment of New Orleans' black population, an episode Bush would later call the "lowest moment of [his] presidency."

West rarely had kept his mouth closed before (even when it was wired shut), but now people listened more closely as his good intentions started clashing with his grand actions.

The kid from "Dropout" had changed, penning grimmer lyrical material (blood diamonds, addiction, etc.) for prettier beats. They were never without a little flair; West can never get out of his own way. Musically, he's often identified as a trendsetter, but he's really more of a trend-perfector. In the case of "Registration," that meant swapping out the soul revival he had furthered for ornate instrumentation and effects.

AND BABY MAKES THREE

Talk about good timing. Kim Kardashian gave birth to Kanye's baby girl Saturday at Cedars-Sinai hospital in L.A., eonline.com reports. No word yet on the little lady's name, but EW reports it probably will begin with a K. Because duh.

Yet people mostly hated this album, despite West giving them more of himself than ever. It's that idea that makes West the ultimate celebrity: He's real enough to crave approval and make mistakes but woodenheaded and ambitious enough to come back for more after people tear him down.

In a recent New York Times interview, West said his art-rock hip-hop opus, 2010's "My Beautiful Dark Twisted Fantasy," was, at least in part, a product of the 2009 Taylor Swift incident, a challenge for people to "keep [him] off their shelves." In other words, a way for him to showcase his allegedly undeniable gifts and high-art aspirations. The acclaimed album was, as usual, brashly unapologetic, as was "Watch the Throne," his epic joint album with Jay-Z that was more of a black-power showcase than the nouveau-riche braggadocio it was hailed as.

That brings us to now, when West's 20-foot head appears on buildings as he attempts to rap about modern slavery on the Alamo. Even had he not titled the new record "Yeezus," West would have succeeded again at maximizing his own expectations. He considers himself a crusader, but he's just remaining fiercely loyal to himself.

His message hasn't changed since "All Falls Down" ("Man I promise, I'm so self-conscious/ That's why you always see me with at least one of my watches"). Now, he just plans to yell it so that everyone might see him as brilliant, arrogant and contradictory. Regardless, the product always will be unabashedly Kanye.

ADAM LUKACH IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

TRACK REVIEWS

By Adam Lukach

REDEYE SOUND BOARD

Over the weekend, Kanye West stopped traffic in Chicago and across the U.S. with projections of videos from songs on his album dropping Tuesday. "Yeezus."

He did the same thing in late May to premiere "New Slaves," when 20-foot-tall projections of his mug spit lyrics of equal proportion: "My mama was raised in the era when/clean water was only served to the fairer skinned/Doing clothes you would have thought I had help/but they wasn't satisfied unless I picked the cotton myself."

That same weekend in May, just days after West endearingly declared himself "not a celebrity" at a New York show, he debuted "Black Skinhead" on "Saturday Night Live." The song did nothing to lessen the weight of his words.

It was quite a weekend for a non-celebrity, but that rather ridiculous disconnect is what you've always had with West; the desire to be better curbed by the desires of being human. On "Black Skinhead" he declares, "I had a dream that I could buy my way to heaven/when I woke, I spent that on a necklace," equating modern racism with modern consumerism and other hegemonies. He takes expectations and subverts them, like, again, an attention-grabbing celeb claiming to be nothing of the sort.

The songs' sonics are menacing, minimalist and striking: a warped undercurrent of punchy synths on "Slaves" punctuates every condemnation Yeezy offers in his deadpan delivery, much like "No Church in the Wild" (both West songs feature Frank Ocean). "Skinhead" is theatrical punk-rap, combining a relentless rumble with a shrieking chorus to cast an ominous tone on lyrics like, "They see a black man with a white woman/At the top floor they gon' come to kill King Kong."

Veiled Kim Kardashian reference or not, it's an enlightening way to think about the alleged hypocrisy of the Louis Vuitton Don's "new lyrical look." West still is embroiled in conversations of modern race. He dates a hyper-famous white woman, has aspirations of high fashion, etc. Not to diminish the pair, but he's not tucked away in the Hamptons like Jay-Z or Diddy; just as West's musical conversations no longer are tucked away behind chipmunk soul samples and pink polo jokes. And he's had them before—just look at "All Falls Down," "Crack Music" or basically the entirety of "Watch the Throne."

Now, he's forcing us to take notice, calling songs "New Slaves" or "Black Skinhead," which, beyond being startling stylistic changes from one of the world's biggest pop stars, thrust those conversations to the forefront along with his flaws.

It's not a "political phase." It's a musician with enough arrogance and awareness to publicly reconcile the dichotomy of who he is, trying to get everyone else to reconcile with the deeply flawed system that bore him this way.

'The Voice' Top 3: Handicapping the finalists

This season of "The Voice" dismissed every possible question about its singing-competition superiority except one: Can it produce a Kelly Clarkson-size superstar?

Well, they will certainly try at 7 p.m. Monday on NBC—as teenage country phenom Danielle Bradbery, alterna-pop singer Michelle Chamuel and harmony-loving duo The Swon Brothers compete in "The Voice" Season 4 finale.

After all, "The Voice" already has navigated what could have been a challenging season—as new coaches Usher and Shakira replaced original coaches Christina Aguilera and Cee Lo Green with no drop in chemistry with Blake Shelton and Adam Levine or in ratings. It's an achievement that neither "American Idol" nor "The X Factor" can claim in their most recent seasons.

No matter what the outcome tonight, "The Voice" is already a winner, with more than 14 million viewers in April, around the same number that "Idol" had for its finale.

DANIELLE BRADBURY (TEAM BLAKE)

Age: 16
Hometown: Cypress, Texas
Best moment: Her version of Jessica Andrews' "Who I Am" during Top 5 night showed how far she has come, delivering the sweet, age-appropriate country anthem with the power and style of a pro, even tugging at the heartstrings by singing to her folks in the audience.

Strengths: More than her solid, pretty voice, Danielle's greatest asset is her unflappability, showing none of the nerves that would affect most teenage singers.

Weaknesses: Her calm demeanor sometimes comes across as a little cold.

Chances: The clear favorite

MICHELLE CHAMUEL (TEAM USHER)

Age: 26
Hometown: Amherst, Mass.
Best moment: When she tackled Taylor Swift's "I Knew You Were Trouble" on Top 6 night, with Tay's blessing, Chamuel showed she can be current without sacrificing any of her vocal precision or passion.

Strengths:

The most dynamic of the remaining singers, Chamuel's voice has great power and control, useful for everything from ballads to rockers.

Weaknesses: Her "It Gets Better" vibe is praiseworthy, but it drags after a while.

Chances: The underdog ready to pounce if Danielle stumbles

THE SWON BROTHERS
(TEAM BLAKE)

Age: Zach (top), 28; Colton, 24

Hometown: Muskogee, Okla.

Best moment: Their version of Loggins and Messina's "Danny's Song" on Top 5 night showed they can appeal to more than just hardcore country fans with their brotherly harmonies.

Strengths: In addition to being extraordinarily likable, the Swons have the harmonies to make any song sound unique.

Weaknesses: At times, they got too tied up in the traditional country leanings of their coach, cutting them off from a larger audience.

Chances: The dark horse that may be peaking at the right time

Will Superman get some super friends?

MCT

So the billion-dollar question is ... can "Man of Steel" help DC Comics catch up to Marvel Comics at the box office?

Maybe.

Warner Bros. is fast-tracking a "Man of Steel" sequel, with a "Justice League" super-team movie to follow. Deadline.com reported that the "Man of Steel" director/writer team of Zack Snyder and David S. Goyer would return for more.

Goyer told MTV about some clues within "Man of Steel" foretelling possible films in the DC universe. A truck and a building bear the logo for Lexcorp, the company owned by arch-nemesis Lex Luthor, who never appears in this installment. If you listen carefully, you'll hear mention of S.T.A.R. labs, where, in the comics, the half-man, half-machine Cyborg is born. And a space fight between Superman and Zod destroys a satellite bearing a Wayne Industries logo.

Wayne as in Bruce Wayne.

As in Batman.

Though maybe not the Batman of Christopher Nolan's "Dark Knight" movies.

"The 'Dark Knight' films do not exist in the same universe," Goyer said. "Zack has gone on record. The fact that we have Wayne Industries on the satellite, Bruce Wayne exists in this universe. Lex Luthor exists in this universe. Other metahumans do exist in this universe, so the hope is, depending on how the film does, that we'll be able to roll into some other films."

"Man of Steel" pulled in $113.1 million over its first weekend of release. "Iron Man 3," by comparison, opened with $174 million earlier this year.

Warner Bros., which owns DC Comics, tried to reboot the Last Son of Krypton in June 2006 with "Superman Returns," starring Brandon Routh. That film opened with $52 million and was considered something of a creative and box-office failure.

The studio's last big superhero movie, "The Dark Knight Rises," grossed $161 million in its opening weekend.

Fans and the studio want a series of DC Comics-based films that build on one another, as Marvel did with Iron Man, Captain America and Thor.

Marvel is readying a slew of sequels: After this year's "Iron Man 3" ($1.2 billion worldwide gross and counting), comes another "Thor" this fall and another "Captain America" next spring. Next summer, Marvel launches the little-known "Guardians of the Galaxy," which somehow will tie in with the "Avengers" sequel in 2015. And on and on.

We held out hope that "Man of Steel" would end with a camera panning across a high-tech computer screen showing footage of the new alien "super man," a report on a green-clad ring slinger (Green Lantern), the discovery of an island of Amazon women (Wonder Woman) and news of a super-fast crime fighter (the Flash). In the background we'd hear the distinctive accent of Michael Caine saying, "I've prepared your breakfast, Master Bruce. Will there be anything more?" and a shot of Christian Bale saying, "Hmm."

No such luck. Those staying through the credits of "Man of Steel" will be rewarded with ... nothing.

ROMANCE PLANET

BY JENNIFER SHEPHERD | READ MORE AT LIPSTICKMYSTIC.COM

Gemini May 21-June 21
Some kind of breakthrough is on its way, thanks to four friendly planets. Your childhood acne will disappear. You'll lose your virginity. Something that you never believed possible is more possible than ever.

Cancer June 22-July 22
Saturn has you craving variety. If you and your honey always stay home, you'll want to hit a concert for a change. Or if your bedroom routine has become predictable, you'll want to shake things up.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22
You could be in a power struggle with your significant other. You want to be the one who gets the deciding vote, but your partner insists on a democracy. Mars is increasing your frustration when you don't get your way.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You're in a generous mood, thanks to the sun. So your girlfriend was unfaithful; it happens. That doesn't mean she can't come back.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23
As an Air sign, you've always been way too attractive for your own good. But this week you could meet someone, launch your usual charm offensive and end up making that person fall madly in love with you. Do you want that?

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21
You're doing better at letting go. Not that long ago, you were forced to ditch a toxic situation. Saturn is helping you to see that you did the right thing. No blame is required.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
The bouncy energies of the summer solstice are giving you extra stamina. You'll schedule three dates in one night and enjoy each and every moment with those sexy folks.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
This isn't the best time to get engaged or make a romantic commitment. You're likely to feel pressured about something, but be true to yourself. The sun is showing you that, when it comes to relationships, you need to be more selfish.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Don't be a wimp. The moon is urging you to stand up for yourself instead of letting your friends, family or lovers walk all over you. It's one thing to be easygoing. It's another thing to let everybody take advantage.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20
You're feeling more hopeful about love and lust, thanks to Venus. Accept party invitations and attend networking events. You're likely to enjoy a light flirtation with someone who will lift your spirits.

Aries March 21-April 19
It's time to have "the talk" with someone. The moon is reminding you that you just can't put it off any longer. Confess to your guy that you've been seeing three other people.

Taurus April 20-May 20
You want to play house, but your honey isn't on the same page. Saturn says negotiate.

If there was any sort of competition between the year's most anticipated superhero films, "Iron Man 3" and "Man of Steel"—which opened at the U.S. box office six weeks apart—"Iron Man" actress Gwyneth Paltrow hadn't heard anything about it.

Surprisingly, Paltrow wasn't even aware the Superman reboot existed.

"I didn't even know there was a Superman movie coming out," a laughing Paltrow said Saturday at the Ritz-Carlton Chicago, where she was honored by the Gene Siskel Film Center, before turning to her publicist and asking in all seriousness, "Did they really make another Superman?"

Even if she did know about the highly anticipated film starring Henry Cavill and Amy Adams, Paltrow probably wouldn't have spent the weekend checking the reviews or box office numbers for "Man of Steel" and comparing them to those of "Iron Man 3." She was busy receiving the Renaissance Award and getting interviewed on stage by Amanda de Cadenet, host of Lifetime's "The Conversation." ("Iron Man" co-star Robert Downey Jr. received the award in 2010 and taped a video message for Paltrow, which was shown during Saturday's gala.) And besides, Paltrow said she's not the rivalry type.

"I'm not competitive," Paltrow said. "Let the best [superhero] win."

Saturday's visit allowed Paltrow to spend more time in a city she loves. In 2011, she came up with a list of her favorite spots in Chicago for her lifestyle newsletter, Goop.

"People really liked it and asked for more," Paltrow said of the list, which included restau-

DID YOU KNOW?

The producers of "Iron Man 3" considered filming the movie in the Chicago area, which is where "Man of Steel" filmed, before deciding there wasn't enough studio space.

rants Schwa in Wicker Park and Riccardo Trattoria in Lincoln Park, and stores Moncler in the Gold Coast and Blake in Near North.

"I definitely got a positive response from the businesses we included," she said. "I like to include places I've been to myself. I've been here a few times since then and think we're going to update the coverage."

Mission to 'Mars'

Yes, sassy-girl-detective fans, it's actually happening. The long-awaited Veronica Mars movie is scheduled to begin shooting Monday, according to creator Rob Thomas, though moviemaking may present him with a unique problem: "Man, reading these MPAA guidelines, I may have really overdone it on this script," he tweeted over the weekend.
